Impacts of the Doha Round Framework Agreement on Dairy Policies. By Suzuki and Kaiser, page 1901. The highly regulated dairy industry will face new challenges in the Doha Round of World Trade Organization negotiations. Domestic dairy supports and export subsidies are expected to be substantially reduced, albeit with exclusions for dairy as “sensitive” products in some countries. With more restrictive access to foreign markets for disposing of surplus dairy products, countries that continue border protection and high internal milk prices will likely be forced to use domestic supply control programs in the future.
